

144. In essence, Eleanor's family are not eligible for legal aid but do not have the financial resources to commence judicial review at significant costs risk to themselves. Those representing the family act pro bono. Given that there are clear grounds to establish insufficiency of inquiry and/or irregularity of proceedings in this case, in addition to the broader public interest considerations in this case, it was considered most appropriate first to pursue this matter by application to the Attorney General rather than judicial review (the remedy of last resort).
